LOTTO BULL CONTEST

Judy White, of Dept. 581-7 was glad she had looked at the March Safety Fact Sheet! She won $300 by knowing the answer to the question, "the man in the picture is falling; what appears to be the cause?" The answer was: "A spill or liquid on the floor."

Judy missed the bonus question, which is based on the previous month's departmental safety meeting, so next week's Lotto Bull question will be worth $100 and the bonus question will increase to $250.

Read the fact sheets which are available at all plant entrances and in the main and cable cafeterias.

Popularity of Fitness Classes on the Rise

A determined group of fitness buffs meet in the company auditorium each Tuesday and Thursday to participate in the Works' Total Life Concept program: Beginning Fitness Classes.

Conducted by TLC coordinator Janice Spethman, the group goes through an active warm-up, aerobic workout and mat work followed by a cool-down period. The classes are adjusted to fit the exercise level of the entire group, according to Spethman.

"There has been a great response from those in the classes and and they are wanting to attend more sessions - daily, or at least three times a week," Spethman said. The classes are now held on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 11:00 a.m. and 11:30 a.m. along with a 4:00 p.m. session.

One prevailing comment from those in the classes is: "I an glad this class has begun. It should have started long ago."

As the classes progress, so does the intensity of the workouts. After a moderate beginning, the pace has picked up as the participants get used to the routine. A total of 63 people attend the sessions.

Lyme Disease

... is an infection resulting from the bite of a certain species of tick. It can start out as a skin rash and can progress through stages to arthritis. The various stages and symptoms of the disease are increasingly well recognized. If detected early, the disease can be treated with antibiotics, and it is possible to protect yourself by following several common-sense tips.

THE BACTERIUM

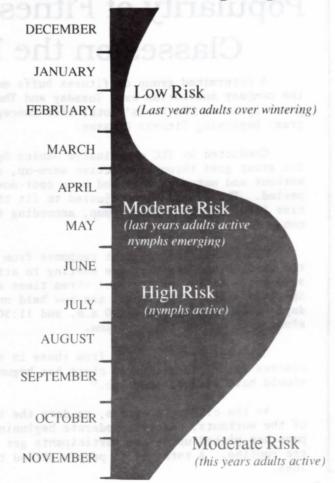

Lyme disease is caused by a coiled bacterium -- a spirochete -- called Borrelia burgdorferi

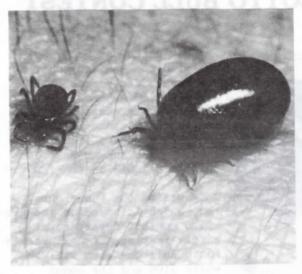

THE TICK

The primary tick which transmits the Borrelia burgdorferi spirochete to humans in the U.S. is called Ixodes dammini. It is smaller than the common American dog tick (known in Nebraska as the wood tick). Ixodes dammini lives in grassy and wooded areas and feeds on small and large animals -- like mice, shrews, birds, raccoons, dogs, opossums, deer, horses, and occasionally, humans.

A significant number of the Ixodes dammini ticks -from ten to as high as 65 percent depending on geographic area -- harbor the spirochete. When the tick bites, the spirochete sometimes passes into the animal's bloodstream where it multiplies, and from where it can be taken up by other blood-sucking ticks or insects.

The Danger Months When ticks bite people

Female Ixodes dammini tick is shown in its engorged and blood-engorged state (about seven times actual size).

TICK HABITATS

The Ixodes dammini tick is widely distributed in the eastern U.S. As of the spring of 1989, this tick had not been recorded in Nebraska although it had been found in neighboring states. The tick's preferred habitats are wooded areas and adjacent grasslands. It is spread in the wild by animals -- birds, mice, raccoons, and deer, for example -- but domestic animals such as cats, dogs and horses can also carry the ticks closer to home. The range of the tick -- and Lyme disease -- appears to be growing as more houses are built in woodlands and as the ticks are distributed inland by birds and other animals. In California and other western states, the spirochete is carried by Ixodes pacificus ticks. In the southeastern U.S., Ixodes scapularis is a confirmed vector. The Lone Star tick, Amblyomma americanum, which is found in parts of Nebraska, has been reported to be a minor vector in parts of the southern United States. Additional ticks are now being investigated as potential vectors.

THE BITE

A tick bite is not painful -- the lxodes dammini tick is so small that its presence often goes unnoticed. In most cases the tick simply bites, draws blood for its nourishment, and drops off. If the tick happens to be infected with spirochetes, it may transmit them during the feeding process. It is important to realize that a tick bite does not always result in Lyme disease.

REMOVING TICKS

The best way to remove a tick is to use a small tweezers. Do not squeeze the tick's body. Grasp it where its mouthparts enter the skin and tug gently, but firmly, until it releases its hold on your skin. The tick's barbed mouthparts (see photo on cover) will not let go easily, so take your time, and be patient. Save the tick in a jar labeled with the date, the location of the bite on your body, and the place where you think you acquired the tick. Your doctor may find this information and the tick specimen helpful in diagnosis if a rash or other symptoms of Lyme disease subsequently appear. Wipe the bite area thoroughly with antiseptic.

TREATMENT

Like most illnesses, when detected early, Lyme disease is easily treated. As it "settles in," it is harder to deal with...but it can still be handled.

For the early stages of the disease, oral antibiotics are the preferred treatment. Once treatment begins, the rash usually fades within days; symptoms of headache, fatigue, and muscle pain may take longer to resolve. Later stages of the disease may require injections of antibiotics, sometimes administered at a hospital. It is important to follow your doctor's instructions on medications to be certain that the spirochete has been completely eradicated.
